

Workshop:

Health, leadership and trust in research institutions

The responsibilities of academic institutions, funding agencies and journal publishers/editors

Abstract:

The workshop will address the following question in an interdisciplinary context: How should university departments and research institutes safeguard and develop the health (in technical, ethical and psychological senses) of research groups, the leadership of group leaders, and research-stakeholders' trust in research? In particular, what recommendations should we make to the University of Heidelberg and to the Max Planck Society, to funding agencies, and to journal publishers/editors? And what could early stage scientists learn from this discussion for their individual careers?

Participants are invited to contribute with short presentations (approximately 15 minutes). The syllabus with topics for presentations will be provided soon. Further topics can be suggested to the instructor of the workshop by 21th November 2018.

Target group: 20 graduate students (Master and PhD) and early stage postdoctoral fellows of all disciplines (sciences and humanities)

Instructor: Sir Philip Campbell PhD
Editor-in-Chief, Springer Nature / Editor emeritus, Nature
Inaugural Springer Nature Visiting Professor, Winter term 2018-19
